

DAILY SYSTEMS

The ADHD Daily Standup Planner

One screen, one next action. Plan your day the way an ADHD brain actually works - with AI prompts that set it for you.

Stop facing a wall of tasks. Face one next action.

- 1 Morning: name today's 1-3 that matter - no more.
- 2 Pick the SINGLE first action and start there.
- 3 Midday: did you start it? What's the smallest unblock?
- 4 Evening: what shipped, what slipped, one win.
- 5 Drafted is not done. Shipped/published is done.

That's the whole system. The rest of this guide walks each step, with copy-paste prompts you can run in one tap.

The deep walkthrough

1

Set the day in 60 seconds

Don't plan everything - decide the 1-3 that matter and the first move.

PROMPT · SET MY DAY

Be my ADHD chief of staff. Ask me what's on my plate today, then cut it to the 1-3 tasks that matter most toward [MY GOAL]. Give me ONE first action to take right now - the smallest physical step. Don't give me a long list.

2

Beat the freeze

When you stall, shrink the task until it's impossible to avoid.

PROMPT · SHRINK THE TASK

I'm frozen on [TASK]. Break it into the smallest possible first step (under 2 minutes), then the next, then the next - but only show me ONE at a time. Wait for me to say 'done' before the next.

Midday reset

A quick check keeps the day from slipping away.

PROMPT · MIDDAY RESET

It's midday. Ask me what I've actually done, then re-set my single most important next action for the rest of the day. Keep it to two lines.

4

Close the day

Name the win. Momentum is built on noticing it.

PROMPT · CLOSE MY DAY

Close out my day: ask what shipped, what slipped (no shame, just why), and one win. Then tell me the likely first action for tomorrow so I start warm.

THE RULE

Reduce decisions, not effort. One clear next move at a time. Momentum over perfection.
