The Honest Founder Newsletter

A structure, swipe lines, and prompts for emails people actually open - because they sound like a human, not a brand.

Honesty outperforms polish. Be plain, specific, a little vulnerable.

- 1 Hook: one honest line, no preamble.
- 2 The turn: the real reason or lesson.
- 3 The proof: one concrete example.
- 4 The ask: reply with one thing.
- 5 One real email a week beats five polished ones a month.

That's the whole system. The rest of this guide walks each step, with copy-paste prompts you can run in one tap.

The deep walkthrough

1

Find the honest angle

The story you'd hesitate to tell is usually the one that lands.

PROMPT · FIND MY ANGLE

Ask me what happened this week in my work or life that taught me something. Then turn it into the honest angle for a short newsletter - the real, slightly vulnerable version, not the polished one.

2

Write it in your voice

Plain words. Short lines. No corporate gloss.

PROMPT · DRAFT THE EMAIL

Write a short, honest founder newsletter from this angle: [PASTE]. Structure: a one-line hook, the turn (real reason/lesson), one concrete proof, and an ask to reply with one thing. Plain voice, no hype, no jargon.

3

Sharpen the subject

The subject decides if it's opened at all.

PROMPT · SUBJECT LINES

Give me 7 subject lines for this email: [PASTE]. Honest and curiosity-driven, not clickbait. Mark the one you'd send and why.

THE REPLY ENGINE

End every email asking for a one-line reply. Replies lift deliverability and surface your warmest leads.
