

THE SOLO FOUNDER SERIES

Delegate to AI Agents

Stop doing every task yourself. Assign work to AI managers, review the output, and keep only the decisions that need you.

You're not the worker. You're the one who guides and approves.

- 1 Name a manager per area: marketing, research, product, ops.
- 2 Give each a one-sentence remit and standing rules.
- 3 Hand off with a clear task + the deliverable format.
- 4 Review: approve, redirect, or ship. Nothing ships without you.
- 5 Keep the human-only work: taste, relationships, final calls.

That's the whole system. The rest of this guide walks each step, with copy-paste prompts you can run in one tap.

The deep walkthrough

1

Define a manager

One sentence of remit beats a paragraph of vague instructions.

PROMPT · DEFINE A MANAGER

Act as my [marketing] manager. Write your own job description in one sentence, list the standing rules you'll follow, and propose the first 3 things you'd work on for [MY BUSINESS]. Then wait for my go.

2

Hand off a task

Make the deliverable and the stop-point explicit.

PROMPT · HAND OFF A TASK

Task for you as my [role] manager: [TASK]. Constraints: [BRAND/VOICE/LIMITS]. Deliver it as [FORMAT]. Do not ship or send anything - present it to me for approval first. If anything's ambiguous, ask before starting.

3

Review fast

A quick rubric keeps quality high without you redoing the work.

PROMPT · REVIEW THIS DRAFT

Critique your own draft as if you were a tough editor: what's weak, what's off-brand, what to cut. Then give me the improved version. Be honest, not flattering.

WHAT STAYS HUMAN

Final approval, taste, relationships, and the calls only you can make. Everything upstream of that can be delegated.
